History of The Walper Hotel

Following in the footsteps of 119 years of notable visitors, The Walper invites its guests to rediscover the hotel where Eleanor Roosevelt enjoyed breakfast in the courtyard and Louis Armstrong played his trumpet off the King Street balcony.

Credited as the original commercial establishment in the town of Berlin, and recognized as the first to have hydro power, guests will be treated to a unique balance of history and modern comfort as they stay, dine, or celebrate in the hotel enjoyed by William Lyon MacKenzie King, Wilfrid Laurier, Pierre Trudeau and nearly every other Canadian Prime Minister.

Guests are encouraged to explore the building that housed liquor smuggled by Al Capone and that hid Lady Gaga, the queen of display, who remained unrecognized days into her stay.

Visitors will dine in the Ballroom where Lennox Lewis once fought, and relax in suites enjoyed by everyone from Royalty, to leaders in the Arts, Culinary, Cultural, Technological, Financial and Political realms who have chosen The Walper as their preferred accommodation in the area for nearly 120 years.
